The Purpose

Diabetes and cardiovascular disease (CVD) pose significant threats to patients and major challenges to the medical community. Modifying type 2 diabetes and CVD risk factors offers the greatest potential for preventing or delaying both diseases and reducing associated morbidity and mortality.

In this meeting, the overlapping areas of diabetology and cardiology will be discussed through a case based discussion.

This expert perspective shall highlight important insights on the challenges of treating patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus (T2DM) and concomitant cardiovascular disease.

The ultimate aim of this unique initiative is to help clinicians identify at-risk patients, integrate evidence-based risk management strategies to target modifiable risk factors, and provide education to patients.
